FINDINGS:

The Second Division of the Adjustment Board, upon the whole record and all the evidence, finds that:

The carrier or carriers and the employe or employes involved in this dispute are respectively carrier and employes within the meaning of the Railway Labor Act as approved June 21, 1934.

This Division of the Adjustment Board has jurisdiction over the dispute involved herein.

Parties to said dispute waived right of appearance at hearing thereon.

On December 4, 1981, a Foreman at the Carrier's Clinton, Iowa Car Shop was displaced by a Senior Foreman. There were at that time ten Foremen junior to this Foreman and working in the same class. Seven were Car Foremen on various repair tracks, two were Wheel Shop Foremen, and one was a Blacksmith Foreman. The Foremen were covered under the terms of an Agreement between the Carrier and the American Railway and Airway Supervisors Association (ARASA).

As third party in interest, the American Railway and Airway Supervisors' Association was advised of the pendency of this case, but chose not to file a Submission with the Division.

The Carrier determined that this Foreman was not qualified for any of the above ten positions. It therefore permitted him to exercise displacement rights as a Carman based upon his seniority in that craft.

The Organization asserts that this Foreman was improperly permitted to exercise displacement rights into the Carman craft, thereby depriving the Claimants of work and wages as detailed in the Claim. The Organization acknowledges that Foremen and Supervisors promoted from the Carman ranks continue to accumulate seniority as Carman, and under certain conditions may exercise such seniority to return to Carman positions. However, it argues that in the instant case this Foreman could have displaced a Foreman junior to him and continued working as a Supervisor.

With regard to this Foreman's qualifications as a Foreman, the Organization argues that since he served in a Supervisory capacity at Clinton, he must have had the potential to serve in a similar capacity at other locations and over different processes. This Foreman should have been given opportunity to qualify for other Supervisory positions, the Organization asserts. Instead, the Carrier disqualified him from same before he even held the jobs. And it appears that this Foreman voluntarily relinquished his seniority rights in the Supervisory class by signing a December 2, 1981, letter attesting to his lack of qualification for the Supervisory jobs held by Foremen junior to him.

The Carrier notes that as a Foreman, he was covered by its Labor Agreement with the American Railway and Airway Supervisors Association. Under Rule 8 of that Agreement:

"Employees whose positions are abolished or who are displaced may exercise their seniority by displacing a junior employee in their seniority district or revert to the class from which promoted but their exercise of seniority in that class shall be governed by the rules and agreements governing the class to which reverting."

Moreover, both parties have relied upon a July 15, 1957, Letter of Understanding from the Director of Personnel, to General Superintendent Motive Power and General Superintendent Car Department. And the Organization has cited Second Division Award No. 5933 in support of its position. That Award rested heavily on the interpretation and application of the 1957 Letter of Agreement.

In concert with Award 5933, this Board finds that resolution of the instant case is also dependent upon the application and interpretation of the Letter of Agreement. It is quoted in pertinent part below:

"Agreements in effect with the federated crafts have been interpreted as follows:

1. Employees promoted from federated crafts to supervisory positions who as result of abolishment of their position are unable to hold position as supervisor and thereby revert to the class from which promoted are in possession of displacement rights in accordance with their seniority.
2. Employees promoted from positions coming under the scope of the federated crafts' agreement to supervisory positions, who as result of abolishment of position and failure to exercise seniority as supervisors, or on account of voluntary relinquishment of position, return to positions coming under the scope of the federated crafts' agreement, are not in position of displacement rights and are not entitled to displace any junior employee in the craft. These employees, returning voluntarily to the class either as the result of giving up their position or as a result of position abolished and failure to exercise seniority to another position for which qualified are permitted to take any open position, and in the event there is no open position must wait until their seniority permits them to bid on a position. (emphasis supplied)"

Thus, in accord with the Letter of Agreement, a Foreman returning to his craft as a result of abolishment of his Foreman position or displacement by a more senior Foreman must first exercise his seniority to another appropriate Foreman position for which he is qualified. In Award 5933, which involved the same parties as does the present case and strikingly similar facts, the Board sustained the Claim in large part because it found no evidence that the Foreman was not qualified to take another Supervisory position. That Board found:

"Carrier's averment that Hirtz (the foreman) was not qualified to perform service as a foreman on the repair track is a selfserving conclusionary statement and has no evidentiary value.

While it is true that Carrier has the initial right to determine qualifications of its employees the determination is subject to rebuttal.

The record contains no admission of waiver by Hitz that he was not qualified to displace the junior foreman on the repair track."

In the instant case the record does contain a written admission by this Foreman that he was not qualified to serve as a Supervisor in the available positions to which his seniority entitled him. Therefore, we find no reason to discount the Carrier's determination that he was not qualified for such positions. Furthermore, we do not regard his written acknowledgment of his lack of qualification as evidence that he voluntarily relinquished his Supervisory seniority rights. Rather, his letter merely attested to his qualification level. It did not indicate that he wished to waive his right to exercise seniority as a Supervisor.

We note the Organization's argument that this written statement was not given to employe Representatives on the property. However, the statement itself is not a new argument, it merely confirms the Carrier's argument that he was not qualified for the Supervisory positions to which he was entitled by virtue of his seniority. And that argument was indeed raised on the property by the Carrier.

In accordance with the Letter of Agreement of 1957, we find that this Foreman was not able to hold a position as Supervisor and did not voluntarily relinquish his Supervisory status. He did not "fail to exercise seniority to another position for which qualified," and it was appropriate for the Carrier to permit him to exercise his Carman seniority in returning to his craft.

Both parties presented several additional arguments, which we have evaluated in their entirety. Those which were not made on the property were disregarded. Since we have determined, however, that resolution of this Claim rests on application of the 1957 Letter of Agreement, there is no need to discuss the remainder of the parties' argument here.
